

MR. and MRS. CHARLES SLAIGHT

Wedding Vows Recited At Ceremony in Church

The Rev. Edson Outwin officiated Saturday, Oct. 17, 1987, when Deborah L. Dye and Charles A. Slaight were united in marriage.

The ceremony was held at Christ Episcopal Church in Cuba. The bride is the daughter of Larry and Caroline Dye of 8820 Hubbell Hill, Cuba, and the groom is the son of Bill and Ruth Slaight of West Sparta RD 3.

The bride wore a full-length satin gown with a lace bodice accented with pearls, a dropped waist, empire neckline, Victorian-style sleeves and a cathedral-length train. She wore a beaded, chapel-length veil. She carried a cascade of white roses, stephanotis, ivy and sparkling babies' breath.

Anita Layfield of Dickinson, Texas, was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Jane Dye of Cuba, sister-in-law of the bride, Jeanne Bussiere of Colchester, Conn., Shirley Lacy of Freeport, and Debby Marks of Rochester and Maureen McGovern of Bridgeport, Conn.

The bridesmaids wore floor-length, rose gowns with wreaths of babies' breath in their hair. They carried nosegays of pink carnations and babies' breath.

David Johnson of Philadelphia was best man. Serving as ushers were Dennis Dye of Cuba, brother of the bride, Todd Hartson of Detroit, Mich., Jody McDonald of Yonkers, Paul Patera of Pittsburgh and Mark Buckley of Rochester.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the Old Library, Olean.

The bride is a 1983 graduate of Ithaca College and is an account executive for WHEC-TV in Rochester.

Her husband is a 1983 graduate of Slippery Rock University of Pennsylvania and is completing a masters in business at Rochester Institute of Technology. He is an advertising account executive for Greater Rochester Cablevision.

Following a trip to St. Kitts, the couple reside in Rochester.

Homemaker's Corner

By KATHERINE T. HUMPHREY

January used to be famous for its "white sales." Merchants all over the country would pull out their stocks of towels, sheets, and linens and offer them at special prices. Now, consumers are just as likely to find white sales in June.

A calendar for sales is a good idea, says Josephine Swanson, consumer educator with Cornell Cooperative Extension. "It implies a plan, and the possibility of consumers being able to predict what sales will occur when."

"But," she warns, a definite calendar of sales is more theory than reality. And, it's becoming more theoretical all the time as retailers, fighting intense competition and lagging sales, keep trying new sales times and techniques to capture their share of the market.

For instance, gift-givers used to tear out their hair after Christmas, when all the new toys and clothing they had bought were reduced for sales. Now, gift items are just as likely to go on sale before Christmas as after.

This leads to much speculation, Swanson says. "How do you determine when to buy? Consumers have to pay careful attention and try to determine and follow market rhythms."

There might, however, be some traditionalists still left in retailing. Here is a rundown of some of the monthly sales you might find during the year. And then again, you might not.

January: post-holiday clearance sales, white sales, leftover winter coats.

February: Washington and Lincoln birthday sales, furniture and floor coverings, new and used cars.

March: china, glassware, silver, pre-season sales on spring and summer shoes.

April: post-Easter clothes sales, air conditioners, ranges and ovens.

May: Memorial Day sales, televisions, radios, outdoor sporting goods.

June: men's sportswear, furniture, linens and bedding. Houses may be cheaper, too, as real estate agents try to sell off properties in time for children to change schools.

July: anything to do with the beach and summer activities like gardening; refrigerators and freezers, tires, fuel oil, storm windows.

August: garden furniture, white sales (again), back-to-school items.

September: sidewalk sales of summer clothing and goods, Labor Day specials in home furnishings, rugs, sporting goods, automobile clearance sales.

October: Columbus Day sales on school supplies, hosiery, fabrics, carpets.

November: Election Day and Veterans Day sales in wool dresses and coats, home improvement supplies, furniture, trees and shrubs, houses.

December: post-Christmas sales, women's dressy dresses, men's coats and suits, children's coats.
